Herbert sinks key putts to win in Bermuda

Australia's Lucas Herbert went birdie-bogey during a crucial stretch on the back nine and held on to win his first PGA Tour title at the Butterfield Bermuda Championship in Southampton, Bermuda.

Herbert's two-under 69 lifted him to 15-under 269 for the event at Port Royal Golf Course on Sunday, one stroke better than Patrick Reed and New Zealand's Danny Lee.

Herbert made a lengthy birdie putt at No 12 to take the lead for the first time, but he gave it right back with a bogey at the par-three 13th.

At No 14, his putt from across the green broke left to right and caught the right lip of the cup, propelling him back into the lead.

"We've holed an obscene amount of putts from outside 25 feet [7.62m] this week and got over that one on 14, just went like, 'This is my range. I've holed so many, this is my range,'" Herbert said.

"The whole way it's just, like, that's not missing. 'Yeah, obviously caught the ledge and got in there, but I felt confident before I even hit the putt.'

After the putt dropped, Herbert finished with four pars to stay a nose above the pack.

"It's really tough to keep your mind from jumping too far ahead and thinking, you know, what are you going to say in the winner's speech or what's the photo going to look like with the trophy?" Herbert said.

"I had to make sure that I kept myself in check; there's still a tournament to be played."

Herbert entered the week as the No 57-ranked player in the world and already had two European Tour wins in his name.

Lee held the lead at 15 under as he made the turn, but at No 12 a series of misplayed shots led to a double bogey. He went on to bogey the next two holes and seemingly drop out of contention, but Lee followed with three straight birdies at No 15-17 to give Herbert a scare.

Lee's hectic round went down as an even-par 71. "A lot of good and a lot of bad," Lee said of his day.

"I fought really hard for it, just 12 through 14 was a very, very tough stretch for me.

"I hit a really, really good shot on 12, just went over the green by I don't know how much, but it was kind of a tough shot from back there.

"Made a silly double there. 'I was just a little confused with my putting.'"

Earlier in the day, Reed shot a six-under 65 to reach 14 under, establishing the number to beat.

"Reed, the highest-ranked player in the field, made seven birdies and one bogey and posted his best finish since an ankle injury and a bout of pneumonia in August.

"I think it gives me a lot of confidence," Reed said.

"Ever since I got back from being sick, it just seemed like the offence wasn't quite there. "I wasn't making enough birdies and when that happens, one loose swing here or there, it turns around, try to salvage a mediocre round. "This week I definitely produced enough offence, but I need to take away some of the careless errors."

Patrick Rodgers (70) placed fourth at 13 under. Scott Stallings shot the round of the day, a bogey-free nine-under 62, to jump up to 12 under. — Field Level Media
